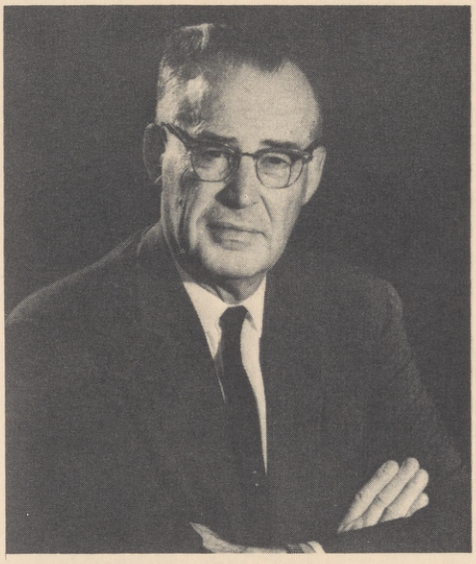
SAN FRANCISCO COLLEGES TACKLE CITY PROBLEMS



Chancellor Fleming

San Francisco's five colleges and universities are mobilizing their resources for an assault on the city's problems.

Chancellor Williard C. Fleming and the academic heads of San Francisco State College, University of San Francisco, Golden Gate College, and City College of San Francisco recently announced the creation of an action center for urban affairs, the San Francisco Consortium.

Working closely with the community, the Consortium will serve as a clearing house and a resource bank for the educational community and for planning groups in such fields as urban design, environmental health, social and health services, manpower training, and intergroup relations.

The organization also aims to provide services for increased adult education, neighborhood cultural enrichment, and improved public administration.

The San Francisco Foundation has underwritten the Consortium's first eight months of operation with a $24,000 grant. Topping the agenda is the selection of a full-time director, opening a downtown office, and the formation of an advisory council composed of members from the non-academic community.

Future funding is expected from federal and local agencies and foundations, the five participating schools, groups seeking consultant services, and projects developed by the Consortium.

Dr. Malcolm S.M. Watts is this Campus' representative for the Consortium.

HOW TO OUTWIT "MA BELL"

A department's monthly phone bill can be cut down by attaching a telephone dial lock to the instrument to prevent its use by unauthorized personnel, and by using the inter-campus tie lines when making long distance calls.

Best time to use the tie lines are 8 to 10 a.m. and 12 to 2 p.m.

DR. DENNY ZEITLIN: LANGLEY PORTER'S RESIDENT PIANIST

"I don't feel at all as if I'm leading a double life," says Dennis J. Zeitlin, M.D., a 29-year-old psychiatric resident at Langley Porter and a professional jazz pianist.

His Denny Zeitlin Trio, a first place winner in the International Jazz Critics Poll, has won praise from the nation's press and standing ovations at the Monterey and Newport Jazz Festivals.

"Medicine and music are both necessary parts of my life and they don't really conflict. Perhaps because what I'm trying to do both as a psychiatrist and as a musician is essentially the same—to establish lines of communication with a patient or an audience so a new and often enlightening experience can be shared," he explained.

Downbeat, the music magazine, in a recent review of the Trio and their fifth Columbia album Zeitgeist lauded the Zeitlin sound as achieving that "rare and perfect balance between intellect and emotion."

The Trio's college concerts are often followed by seminars in which students are encouraged to verbalize their feelings and to ask questions about music, Dr. Zeitlin said.

"These discussions have stimulated my interest in the use of jazz as a psychiatric tool." One of his latest projects at LPNI is an experiment in which psychiatric patients will be free to participate creatively through numerous artistic media as the Trio improvises.

"The patients will come into a room where the Trio is playing which will be fitted out with oil paints and easels, modeling clay, and typewriters. Hopefully, they will be moved by the music to do some creating of their own."

The Trio has also completed musical scores for several film documentaries on mental health, one of which, "The Neglected," won a national award.

Dr. Zeitlin studied classical piano from the age of 6 to 14. He gravitated into jazz in high school, and by the time he went to the University of Illinois, where he had a double major of philosophy and pre-medicine, he was deeply involved in music professionally.

"I found jazz a made-to-order musical area for me because I like improvisation and composition.

"But, I love all types of music. I incorporate elements of both the traditional and the avant-garde in my compositions, and our group tries very hard to avoid getting stuck in one musical bag."

A graduate of Johns Hopkins Medical School, Dr. Zeitlin came to San Francisco in 1964. During the two and a half years he's been at LPNI, Dr. Zeitlin and his Trio have been a once-a-week fixture at a Sausalito jazz club, the Trident, in addition to appearances at college concerts and on network television.

A GOOD MAN IS HARD TO FIND

The mushrooming size of the Campus has made it increasingly difficult for the Personnel Office to locate all the employees qualified for promotion. Departments are urged to alert Personnel about job openings and outstanding employees to consider for advancement.
